21 Club

20 August, 2006

The first meeting of the year will be Monday, 18 September

We will meet at 5:30 p.m. for hors d'oeuvres and cocktails, at the house of Hugh Witemeyer,

461 Graceland SE. From the university, take Coal Ave. east to Graceland, two blocks before (west of) Washington. Turn south and go to the end of the 400 block.

At 6:30 pm we will begin to assemble for dinner at 6:45 p.m., at the Los Equipales Restaurant, on the southwest corner of Jefferson and Silver [4500 Silver Ave. SE] The speaker will be Joyce Szabo, Dept. of Art and Art History, speaking on the subject,

"To Collect or Not To Collect, or What Our Collections Say about Us." An abstract of her talk is on the opposite side of this page.

Please return your reservation slip below, at least by Thursday, 14 September! Indicate whether you will be attending both parts of the meeting, or only just the dinner and talk, or just the pre-dinner cocktails.

Note that the cost is $19 per person, with the speaker being the guest of the club.

To Collect or Not To Collect, or What Our Collections Say about Us

Most of us collect something; some of us collect a great many different and seemingly unrelated things. What makes us select the objects to collect that we do? What do those selections say about us? From a brief general discussion of collections, I will examine the motivations behind nineteenth-century collections of Native American and First Nations works made specifically for sale and what those pieces say about both their creators and their purchasers. As is the case with many works, these objects went out of fashion, sometimes found their way into attics or yard sales; some even ended up in the trash. As is often the case, tastes have changed thus bringing many of these previously undesirable pieces back into favor. How do contemporary collectors of the same objects differ from their nineteenthcentury predecessors? The variability of "value," what that means and how it affects collections, is at the root of the stories examined here.
